Shaping the Future of Our Island, Together.

Land Use Planning in PEI

Housing, agricultural preservation, climate change, coastal erosion—PEl's challenges are complex, but Islanders are resourceful. This land use engagement initiative is about hearing directly from Islanders on their experiences, ideas and priorities for protecting, developing and using land.

We're not starting from scratch. PEI has long studied housing, climate, and land use change. Now we're asking:

What if we brought all these insights together into a clear path forward? What does the future look like?

Get Involved

Land ownership and land use raise important questions for Islanders. This engagement process is a chance to ask those questions openly, share accurate information, and build an approach to land use that is fair, transparent, and rooted in community priorities.

This is more than a policy discussion, it's a conversation about people, place, and possibility. When it comes to PEI, Islanders know the land best. Your voice matters in shaping a future that reflects local knowledge, lived experience, and shared values.

Share

Join the conversation, from September 8 to October 17, 2025, we welcome Islanders to participate in one or more of the following ways:

- » Complete a survey
- » Find us at PEI events and gathering spaces
- » Share on a community sounding board
- » Attend a workshop

Your input will help the provincial government decide on how to move forward with addressing land use in PEI. Scan the QR code or visit peilanduse.ca to learn more.

What is Land Use

Land use affects us all. It shapes where homes are built, where farmland is protected, where businesses can grow and how forests and shorelines are managed. Here are examples of what land use decisions can shape in our communities.
